SPONSORED LUNCH

ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES CENTER

There will be a guided tour of the Environmental Studies Center followed by a raptor show. The Environmental Studies Center is a natural sciences education facility designed to provide unique learning experiences. In addition, wildlife rehabilitation plays a vital role each day at the Center. Featuring over 500 acres of rich woodlands, the Center affords teachers, students, and the public an opportunity to experience firsthand the natural environment. Natural resources include pine and bay forests, swamps, freshwater streams, carnivorous plant bog, and a twenty-acre lake. Man-made resources include numerous nature trails, covered pavilions, live animal exhibits, butterfly garden, and native plant garden. Indoor facilities include an auditorium, library, classroom containing live reptile exhibits, a saltwater aquarium, and numerous preserved specimens native to Alabama. The Environmental Studies Center houses a wildlife rehabilitation program that is dedicated to the care and potential release of injured and orphaned native wildlife. The wildlife rehabilitation program receives over 600 wild patients a year. These animals all need food, care, and shelter to survive. The program relies upon donations from people like you for its operation. Numerous staff-led programs are available to public, private, and parochial schools. Teachers may choose from programs that are correlated to the Alabama Science Course of Study at each grade level. These programs are based on the natural sciences. All programs require advanced reservations and may be subject to group size limitations.

“Teacher, how do I become a ...?”

How can you empower students to have confidence to pursue STEM and entrepreneurship focused careers? Educators in attendance will gain access to several sponsored online resources that identify students’ individual interests in STEM and entrepreneurship, and enable them to explore those possibilities in an engaging way. The resources are student-driven, standards-aligned, and have assessments embedded into them, enabling students to go at their own pace as the teacher can be a facilitator in the classroom and see measurable outcomes from student work. Ideal for middle and high school educators. Join us or visit EVERFI.com/k-12 to learn more.

Katie McMeans, EVERFI K-12

Exciting Supply Chain and Warehousing Careers for Your Students

In two years, there's been a 50% increase in warehouse, distribution center and supply chain jobs. Alabama's prime location on the Gulf Coast puts it within day's drive from half of the U.S. population, making it the chosen location for many companies' distribution headquarters. It's a GREAT time for your students to land well-paying supply chain jobs. According to Emsi/Burning glass, $19.88 is the national average entry-level wage! Join NRF Foundation staff for a lively discussion about career paths in warehousing and supply chain. Get a peek at the newest RISE Up credential, Warehouse, Inventory & Logistics, which the NRF Foundation created in collaboration with the Association for Supply Chain Management. After the conference, each attendee will be invited to explore this exciting and relevant course, free of charge.

Food Science Inclusion in STEPS ((School Teachers & Educational Professionals in Science)

Many education professionals and students believe that food science focuses on cooking or meal preparation. This is misconception is common as the US food supply is taken for granted in regard to cost, safety, convenience, and acceptability. Students hear of majors in biology, chemistry, nutrition and dietetics but rarely hear of food science, even though there are competitions, television stations and advertisements that they experience or view daily. It is a continuous effort to recruit strong science-based students as the first time that many of these students hear of food science is the first day they visit campus, or even during their freshman year. It is vital to introduce application of science principles in the development of food products for increased inclusion by educational professionals. This will help ensure and increase in food science graduates to fill the annual need of graduates as the current number of food science professionals cannot meet the demand of the growing global population. This session will walk participants through demonstrations, laboratory experiments, and discussions on how food science can be presented in STEM areas to motivate and excite students and teachers.
